...dence of the original grade and the summer school grade," she said.

The charter board will meet with parents Tuesday to discuss options for reassigning students, Richardson said. Moreover, a consultant will monitor staffing levels and the atmosphere at the school, in light of the dismissal of Miller, Ramin and several teachers.

The New School was founded by Albert "Butch" Hopkins, president and chief executive of the Anacostia Economic Development Corp., and other business leaders in 2000 to train low-income students to become entrepreneurs.

Hopkins defended White, saying that she would not have ordered anyone to alter transcripts. "I don't believe that for a moment. That's inconsistent with her character. . . . Her reputation is beyond reproach," he said.

The charter board put the New School on probation in 2003, giving it an opportunity to correct its deficiencies. The school, according to the board, had not submitted required financial audits and met one of its eight academic targets.

Hopkins said the New School's board of trustees is talking with several other charter high schools that might be able to take over the building in the fall, allowing most of the students to remain there.

COURTLAND MILLOY

An Unsung Champion Of Emancipation Day

MILLOY, From C1

Fifth St. NW for tutoring in reading, writing and arithmetic. Wesley Hanes also managed a neighborhood baseball team.

Loretta Hanes explained that devotion: "When I was 5, a man we called Brother Jordan, who was 105, would stop by our house and bring my brothers, sisters and me sweet potatoes for treats. We'd sit at his feet and listen to his stories. He'd always end by saying, 'Children, you've got to bring others across the bridge of life.' And I'd say, 'Yes sir.' Although I didn't know it at the time, that was my calling: to be of service to others."

In 1966, Hanes co-founded Reading Is Fundamental, a volunteer-run literacy and book giveaway program so successful that it became a model. "Frederick Douglass said that to win our freedom we must 'agitate, agitate.' I believe we must educate, educate," she said.

In 1993, Hanes persuaded the National Archives to take the Emancipation Proclamation, which Lincoln signed nine months after ending slavery in the District, out of an environmentally protective vault and put the document on public display.

I first met her at the National Archives that year. She was giving students from Nalle Elementary School in Marshall Heights a primer on freedom and informed them that on the spot where they were standing there had once been a slave market. I quoted one student in my column as saying, "I'm glad that's not happening now."

But Hanes knew then, as she does now, that the shackles of slavery have not been completely broken. We've still got them on the brains. She told me recently that "we are still a long way from Emancipation Day."

Loretta Carter Hanes, 79, began organizing Emancipation Day events in the District in 1992.

observances, which lasted from 1866 to 1901.

"I can hear the chorus up there — Frederick Douglass, Harriet Tubman, Sojourner Truth — singing, 'Hallelujah, we didn't give up on you; don't you give up on the generations to come,'" she said. Hanes began organizing small commemorative events in 1992. D.C. Council member Vincent B. Orange Sr. (D-Ward 5) took up the cause in 2000, introducing legislation that made Emancipation Day an official city holiday last year.

To be fair, District officials did honor Hanes in 2000 with a glass bowl during a low-key ceremony that she was too ill to attend. But after she has spent who knows how much of her money and time on lobbying and organizing, you'd think that city officials — who have allocated more than $400,000 for Emancipation Day events next year — could do better than a bowl.

Not that she's complaining. "I'm just a little old lady shut-in," she said sweetly, noting that diabetes and a spinal injury have prevented her from attending an Emancipation Day event since 1999.

She may be shut in, but let's not shut her out.
