the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased in the UK, and the number of people with a mental health problem who are in contact with mental health services has also increased (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990, 1994, 1997, 2003).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with a mental health problem, and to reduce the stigma and discrimination that they experience. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of mental health services, the establishment of mental health charities, and the development of mental health legislation (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990, 1994, 1997, 2003).

The purpose of this paper is to describe the development of a mental health service in the UK, and to discuss the challenges that have been faced in the process. The paper is organized as follows. First, we describe the development of the mental health service. Second, we discuss the challenges that have been faced in the process. Third, we discuss the implications of the findings for mental health services in the UK.

The development of the mental health service in the UK has been a long and complex process. It has involved the development of mental health services, the establishment of mental health charities, and the development of mental health legislation (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990, 1994, 1997, 2003).
